

This Functional Family: From Inner City to Centre Stage

From a strict upbringing in seventies Tottenham to the stage at Wembley Arena, this is the story of Lyn E Lyn, best known as a rap artist with the band Sindecut. In his own words, Lyndon Haynes recalls the pleasures and privations of a childhood in an inner city, his lifelong battle with sickle-cell anaemia, and his equally lifelong determination to succeed. Supported by his ever-loyal family, his early teenage years saw him become a successful child actor, appearing on television and the stage. In the late eighties his passion shifted to a new musical phenomenon that was sweeping the British Isles from America: hip hop. Caught up in a tide of musical passion, Lyndon was there at the birth of a completely new scene in London, beginning with small gigs in pubs and clubs, and, with Sindecut, gradually rising to become one of the hottest acts around. But, as ever, stardom and youth are often not the strongest combination, and with a candour only an insider can give, he recalls the pressures of both fame and commercialisation, and how the crew's refusal to be enslaved to their record contract led them to fragment and eventually disintegrate: to his mind, a terrible waste of talent and potential.

Policymakers at last are coming to recognize the connection between the breakdown of American families and various social problems. services and is embedded in the Early Years Foundation Stage framework, and in guidance .
